Page 2, third paragraph, lines 15-21:

--When a party wishes to activate call forwarding, it is presumed that the party has gained permission to forward calls to the new destination. Unfortunately, the party may have not obtained such permission. [Additonally] Additionally, improper or [abusinve] abusive forwarding of calls for multi-media sessions can be very costly for the [calle] calling or called party because [multi-meida] multi-media calls consume a large amount of bandwidth, which is very expensive. Moreover, this conventional approach to call forwarding is ripe for abuse in that a malicious party may intentionally forward calls to a destination for which approval has not been obtained.--.
